Early design rules were presented in Ref. , which already emphasized the target to use the material (cast iron) effectively and to consider the process and force flow sensitively.The structural layout was depending on the experience of the designer rather than on calculations. In 1961, Koenigsberger mentioned that a precise calculation of deformations of complex shaped structural components ...

Airworthiness certification is a mandatory but expensive process in aircraft development. To reduce certification cost, it is desired to incorporate certification considerations into aircraft early design stages. The tradeoff between performance and certification constraints and the interactions between the behind-the-scene disciplines require a multidisciplinary design optimization (MDO ...
