Back in the 80s, not only could I smoke in the office (yes, I smoked in my 20s, Salem Lights -- about a pack a day), but I had a cubicle so big it had two ashtrays in it. My boss smoked four packs a day; so did my office-employed aunt, who quit in her 50s, but died of lung cancer at the exact same age I am now (63). I quit when I was 30.

You tell a nosy supermarket clerk who wants to know if you're having a party that you are, even though you're not. That way, the clerk won't know you plan to eat all that ice cream yourself. You exaggerate the amount of time you've been waiting on hold to chat with a customer service representative to make a point of how dissatisfied you are.
